

Citizen Letter on Dorel Industries Inc. Drop-Side Cribs: Entrapment and Suffocation Risks and Request for Urgent Recall

CPSC Photo Dramatization of Stork Craft drop-side crib detachment and entrapment. The same thing happened to 18-month-old Jimmy Biccum, III, of Watertown, New York, in a Dorel Crib. Luckily, Jimmy was rescued before he suffocated. The Biccums call for the recall of Dorel's drop-side cribs to avoid needless new entrapments, injuries and deaths.

Report Date: December 15, 2009

To Theresa Nelson, Compliance Officer at the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission:

This is submitted on behalf of Kristi and James Biccum of Watertown, New York, and their 18-month-old son Jimmy Biccum, III. They understand that you are the compliance officer overseeing investigation of Jimmy's injury caused by a Dorel Asia Lexington Collection 3-in-1 convertible crib. On behalf of all other parents who purchased this product, the Biccums urge the CPSC to recall the Lexington Collection crib and all other Dorel drop-side crib models constructed with what the Biccums believe to be flimsy plastic latches.

As previously reported to you, Kristi and James Biccum purchased a Dorel Asia Lexington Collection crib in or about March of 2008 at their local K-Mart in Watertown, New York. The Biccums' crib was manufactured in January of 2008, and the Lexington Collection cribs have been on the market since 2007. These cribs were recently removed from the market, but they can still be found for sale second-hand on sites such as craigslist.org. See the attached Craigslist postings selling Dorel drop-side cribs in cities across the United States.

The Lexington Collection cribs have drop sides with plastic latches that allow the side of the crib to move up and down for easier access. The Biccums believe that these plastic latches are prone to breaking as occurred with their crib. When they break, they can cause detachment of the drop side and create a dangerous gap into which an infant can become entrapped.

Dorel Asia's Lexington Collection 3-in-1 Convertible Crib

Ms. Biccum noticed some months ago that the drop-side rail of her Lexington Collection crib was difficult to move. She worked around the sticky railing and continued to use the crib, as the malfunction seemed to be just an annoyance and not a safety concern. Ms. Biccum now believes that the sticky drop-side was an indication of the faulty plastic latches; instead of facilitating movement, the latches were catching on the track and slowly breaking.

On the morning of November 23, 2009, Ms. Biccum was at home with Jimmy. Jimmy was asleep in his Dorel crib, and Ms. Biccum woke up and went into the next room. About 45 minutes after she woke up, Ms. Biccum heard an unusual gurgling noise. She immediately went into the other room to see what was wrong, and she found Jimmy strangling in his crib. The left side of the drop-side railing was detached from the track, and Jimmy's head and body were trapped in the 8-inch space left between the railing and the mattress. His feet were touching the ground and his neck was caught in the bedding.

Ms. Biccum had difficulty in removing Jimmy from his entrapment between the broken drop-side and the crib's frame. She was only able to free his head and neck after careful maneuvering. She took pictures of him trapped in his crib once his head was freed (see picture below). Jimmy suffered bruises to his head and neck, he experienced trauma from his entrapment, and he was sore for a few days after his injury. See pictures below of his bruising.

Jimmy entrapped in the Dorel crib after his head was freed

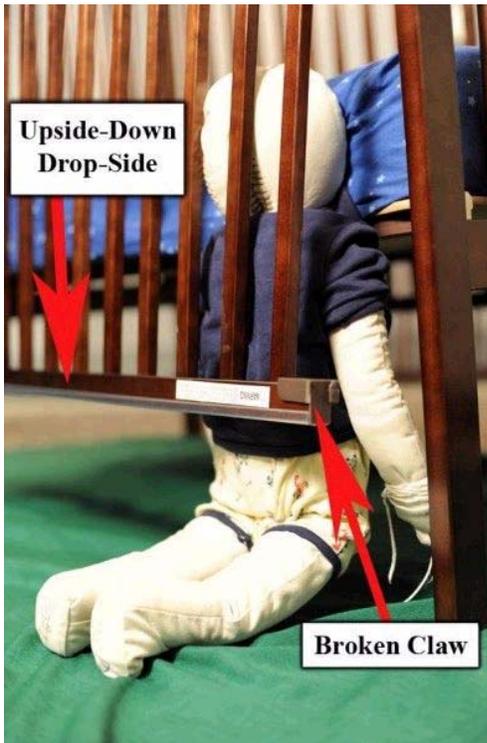

Bruises on Jimmy's face and neck caused by his entrapment

Once Jimmy was freed, Ms. Biccum noticed that the plastic latches on the top and bottom of the left-hand side of the crib were broken, and she realized that this was the cause of the drop-side detachment. Ms. Biccum is certain that the latches were not broken when she put Jimmy in his crib. She believes that Jimmy rolled over and put his weight on the drop-side, which caused the faulty plastic latches to break.

The Biccums believe that the failure in the Dorel drop-side crib is very much like the failure in the recalled Stork Craft drop-side cribs. The drop-side of the Biccums' Dorel crib detached because the plastic latches on the left-hand side of the crib broke. More than 2.1 million Stork Craft drop-side cribs were recalled on November 23, 2009 due to drop-side detachment caused by faulty plastic hardware.

The picture provided by the CPSC of entrapment in a detached drop-side of a Stork Craft almost exactly duplicates how the Biccums' son was entrapped in his Dorel drop-side crib. Jimmy's injury is a signature drop-side crib entrapment injury and a sentinel event that justifies recall of the Dorel cribs.

Signature Drop-Side Detachment Injury

The Biccums believe that Dorel Industries Inc. has long known that its drop-side cribs have functional problems. They believe that numerous consumers have complained on-line that the sides of their Dorel drop-side cribs stick when they try to move them up or down, and other consumers have complained that the latches of the side rail broke off entirely, causing the drop side to remain in the lowered position. Consumers have even reported injuries to the CPSC about their Dorel drop-side cribs, evidenced by the following May 2008 review of the Dorel 3-in-1 Sleigh Crib:

“My nephew fell out of his as well when the clip let go on the side panel that slides down. The clips are made of cheap plastic. We've notified the store we bought it from, and the CPSC about it.”

(<http://www.kaboodle.com/reviews/dorel-3-in-1-sleigh-crib-cherry>)

Another September 2008 review of the same crib states:

“The clips on the crib are plastic, and they break with very little pressure. They even send me a new side panel for it, and low and behold, those clips broke as well.” (<http://www.viewpoints.com/Dorel-Brand-3-in-1-Sleigh-Crib-review-14b22>)

The K-Mart website contains a number of reviews of the Lexington Collection crib, also indicating that Dorel was aware problems with their side latches:

“The biggest [sic] problem is sliding the front down. It sticks and had some problems with one plastic latch on the bottom that was broke. I called the company and the latch was replaced without any problems.”
(<http://www.mymart.com/Lexington-Collection-3-in-1-Convertible-Crib-Cherry-reviews>)

The Biccums fear that a defect in Dorel drop-side cribs may be widespread, potentially endangering many more children than Jimmy Biccum. The CPSC acknowledged to Kristi Biccum that they have received other reports of defects and injuries caused by Dorel drop-side cribs, and they are investigating their safety. Aside from the Lexington Collection cribs and other drop-side cribs sold at K-Mart, Dorel drop-side cribs have been sold at Wal-Mart under the Baby Relax brand. Currently, the design of the Baby Relax cribs has changed to no longer include the drop-side, but the dangerous older model Dorel drop-side cribs still remain in circulation.

Dorel and Stork Craft are not the only companies to produce dangerous drop-side cribs. Simplicity drop-side cribs were recalled in September 2008, Delta Enterprise drop-sides were recalled in October 2008, and LaJobi drop-side cribs were recalled in June 2009. The CPSC recognizes that “cribs with drop sides are the type most likely to experience hardware problems,” and the Biccums are glad to know that the CPSC is driven “to explore new crib requirements and educate the public of the dangers associated with some cribs.” (CPSC release, October 21, 2008, www.cpsc.gov/CPSCPUB/PREREL/prhtml09/09018.html) There are dangers associated with Dorel drop-side cribs, and the Biccums believe the CPSC and Dorel need to warn the public about the dangers and recall the products.

In addition, the Biccums ask you to consider a recall that includes a refund or store credit policy rather than allowing Dorel to offer a repair kit. As stated by the Assistant Attorney General of Illinois in April of 2009, recalls that are incentivized in such a way are much more effective in taking defective cribs out of circulation and preventing further injuries. (Remarks for CPSC Roundtable on Cribs, April 22, 2009, http://www.cpsc.gov/crib_il.pdf) Repair kits also pose their own risks as they are either not installed by the consumer or are installed incorrectly.

This is especially relevant to Dorel convertible cribs like the one the Biccums purchased. Convertible cribs are intended to be in use for years, changing from crib to toddler bed to twin size bed. Parents invest more in convertible beds, planning for the years ahead, and they may need more incentive to remove it from their child's bedroom if there doesn't seem to be an obvious present problem.

For the Biccums and for all parents with Dorel drop-side cribs, the CPSC is hereby urged to recall the drop-side Dorel crib products as quickly as possible before any other children are needlessly entrapped, injured and/or killed.

Respectfully Submitted By:

Charles Kelly, attorney from Hersh & Hersh, Fabrice Vincent, attorney, and Meredith Carpenter, legal assistant, from Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, LLP, On Behalf of Kristi Biccum, James Biccum, and Jimmy Biccum, III.

Reply to: sale-wuvwc-1487055235@craigslist.org [Errors when replying to ads?]

We purchased this crib at K-Mart 3 1/2 years ago for $180 and no longer have a use for it as we've purchased new beds for the kids. The crib is white in color and in very good condition. I believe the only part that was malfunctioning was the slider that allowed you to drop the side down (I never used this function though). Although I do not have any pictures, the model number is DA0504KMC-1W and the company's email address (according to the manual) is DAS@DOREL.com. This crib does not include the mattress.

Thanks
